Alleged Wife-Killer. JOHN COLEMAN, AN EX-CONVICT, CHARGED

WITH KILLING HIS WIFE IN MANCHESTER-HIS ARREST-VIRDICT OF THE CORONER'S JURY, &C.

Susan Coleman, a colored woman, who, at the time of her death resided in Man-chester, near Bowen & Bradley's tannery, died yesterday morning after an illness of a few days. Coroner Ingram was called upon to view the body. Upon questioning several parties in the neighborhood he was led to believe that the woman had died from eruel treatment at the hands of her husband, Flinn Burruss alias John Coleman; whereupon the Coroner directed Constable C. S. Wells to summon a jury of six. The following gentlemen composed the jury: H. A. Jordan, foreman; T. M. Fendley, John W. Owens, James Bradley, A. C. Harding, and David Beattie.

Martha Coleman, a colored woman who lives near Coleman's house, testified before the coroner's jury that about two weeks ago Susan Coleman, the deceased, stated that she had been badly beaten by her husband, and showed to the witness an ugly bruise upon the left leg and another upon the left side, which he had inflicted with a large stick. The witness further testified that the deceased was taken sick immediately after being beaten, and gradually grew worse until she died. She also stated that the deceased had been in excellent health just revious to the time of her husband's beating her, and was enceinte. She did not see oleman beat his wife, but was told about it the next day. Emma Coleman, another colored woman, made the same statement. These witnesses were not related to the deceased.

Claiborne Gray (colored) testified that he saw Coleman beat his (Coleman's) wife about two weeks ago with a heavy stick. Soon after she was struck she fell down. Several other witnesses were examined:

The duo which then follows between the Duchess and her maid is expressive of their resolve when they sing "Whatever May Betide." The Captain and Corporal then enter and take for-mal possession of the mansion as guards over the Duchess and her household, and they sing a capital duet entitled, "Yes, the Soldier from Afar." The music then goes on hand in hand with the plot. The gems of the opers, however, to our mind, are the tenor solo, "Woman's Love," which we mentioned above, the duet between the Duchess and the Corporal, "My Treasure," which is happily descriptive of a funny Bev.
